Plaquemine Lock specializes in oysters, boiled crawfish, po’boys and gumbo. We serve mostly British beers, and all-Luisian cocktails.

Plaquemine is a small town in Louisiana, its lock joining Bayou Plaquemine to the Mississippi. Our chef’s grandmother, Ginny, came from there.

Cajuns descended from Acadians – the Canadians expelled by the Brits during the Seven Years War. Theirs is the country & bourgeois cooking of Louisiana. Their food is rich, elaborate, peppery, & oft full of dark roux, game, pork and crawfish.

Louisiana Creoles are descendants of all the state’s colonial settlers – slaves & slavers - French, Spanish, Italian, African, Caribbean & German. Their cooking, which could be generalized as ‘city cuisine’ – generally, redder (chilli, paprika, tomato), with a greater focus on seafood.
